Class Description

How do you read a dramatic text? What are the dramaturgical rules the reader needs to be familiar with and make use of so that the text becomes a play? How do you write a dramatic text? What, again, are the dramaturgical rules that will help us do so and envisage in what stage context and in what situation the text will be spoken? Through exploring examples of Western Anglophone theatre, the principal aim of this course will be to deal with the issues these questions raise in the most practical way possible.
