Class Description

The aims of the course are essentially to establish a general understanding of production and performance practices, working from a broad based, highly practical view of the various processes involved. Although some theory will be involved, the focus will be on students acquiring a basic practical knowledge of the skills required to put on a theatre performance, with the course progressing from some preparatory work on the voice and the body in performance to identifying and developing interpretative, expressive, interpersonal and improvisatory skills specific to acting and directing that they may go on to develop in possible future projects.

Grading and Assessment

Assessment will be based on a variety of written and oral assignments. Regular participation will play a major role in student success.
